Linguistic Communication

The word 'communication' is derived from the Latin term 'communicare' or 'communio' both of which mean 'to share'. But communication is not merely transmission of meaning from one person to another through symbols, it implies that the system of communication is commonly owned, accepted and recognised by the members of a community. It enables them to acquire, exchange, store, process information.

Communication is, thus, a social affair. What is essential for communication is the cooperation between two parties, one active or at the giving end and the other passive or at the receiving end.

Communication is a network of interactions and naturally, the sender and the receiver keep on changing their roles. Some code of communication are tangible (by physical setting) and other intangible such as intellectual, emotional and psychological. Communication cannot always be regarded as momentary. Rather it is intensification of a continuing process started before the actual communication.

The entire event takes place within a common frame that is called communication environment. Origin of a message which is encoded by the sender, transmitted through the channel and decoded by the receiver.

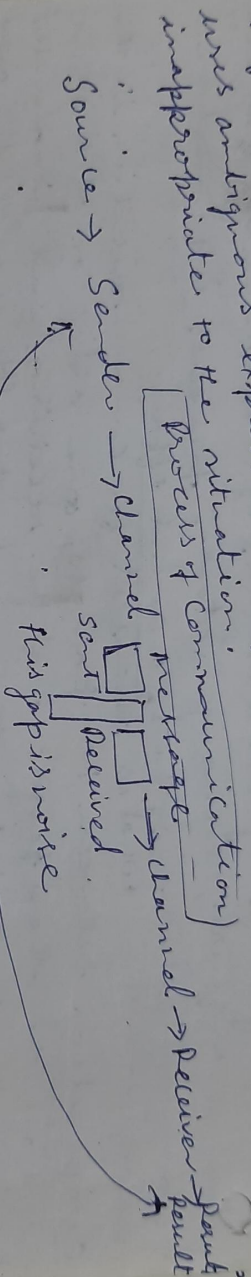

The observance by the receiver is called 'feedback'. The message sent is not the same as the message received. Factors which are responsible for it are termed as 'noise'. The success of communication is measured not only by the effective transmission of the message but also by the achievement of the intended result. The choice of channel is determined by socio-physical factors. (telephone, video conferencing, skype).

Barriers of Communication

There are a number of barriers which produce an error and prevent the achievement of the desired result. Some of these are absence of a common frame, badly encoded, poor messages, disturbance in the transmission channel, lack of retention, inattention by the receiver, distortion of the message and the received, misinterpretation of the message, physical factors. (Sporadic, stammering, autism) and selection of a wrong variety of language.

Post In teaching would be able to focus their mind

Sender and the receiver would be able to focus their mind meaningfully on the message and its context when the sender defines. The remaining difficulties arise when the sender uses ambiguous expressions, highly specialist vocabulary and inappropriate to the situation.

Sometimes one is unable to communicate effectively because of mental, physical fatigue or when psychologically one is out of tune with oneself. Because of previous unpleasant experience in similar situations find it difficult to talk.

Some persons may be reluctant to speak because they are afraid of being evaluated by their peers, superiors etc may be due to psycho-physical factors.

Each language has varieties determined on the basis of the place a person belongs to, social status he enjoys, profession he is engaged or activity he is performing. If inappropriate variety is used communication suffers. For example, if a language was legal language to explain to his family, they family people will not understand. Barriers of Communication

Semantic Barriers — Semantic barriers arise due to problems in language. Semantic means study of meanings of words or signs. Language is a powerful tool of communication. But its coders we can be dangerous. Semantic barriers of language are ① Words with different meanings — ~~Some words are~~ like 'true', 'it may be', 'cost', 'it may cycle rate, gas rate, water rate etc. The word 'cost', it may be production cost, distribution cost, producer cost, expenditure cost and so on. ~~If the total~~ If the total cost is not clear problem will start.

② Denotations and Connotations — Words have three kinds of meanings — denotations and Connotations. Denotation means apparent meaning with no positive or negative qualities like — book, chair, room, computer etc. On the other hand connotative words arouse quality or personal relations like honesty, punctual, cheap, selfish. ~~Connotative words~~ ^{Connotations} have sometimes other things positive meaning like — cheap in bad sense or 'I bought a house in cheap price' means positive sense.

③ Bad Expression — When the message is not formulated and presented in the proper manner, the receiver ~~fails~~ ^{finds} fails to comprehend (understand) it. Use of jargon, acronyms, technical terms are the examples that prevent effective communication. Verbal, poor expression are the other examples responsible for misunderstanding. This as kind of situation causes loss of valuable time and money as it requires further corrections.

④ Faulty Translation —
